

We are small market broadcasters. In our 58 years of operation we have never had a complaint concerning our programming. Our company has been in the same family for all those 58 years. We've learned by living in a small community that if someone or some group has a question or comment you will know right away. I understand the desire of the FCC to reign some broadcasters because of their program content. Why should all stations pay the price for the offending few? The only information the FCC will garner from hours and hours of recorded and logged programming is that the vast majority of us are doing it correctly and serving our communities properly. The financial cost for logging or recording equipment and the labor cost for reviewing the recordings will be burdensome. Seek to police those operations against which legitimate complaints have been filed. I urge the Commission to rethink this proposal.

--MMEX392bc0afe26dcd92e91171ae90dd0fbc--